FATHER BAUER, BRYAN O'NEIL HEAD LOYOLA HOCKEY COACHES CLINIC

Rev. David Bauer, moderator of Canada's National hockey team and one of the best-versed hockey men in the country, headlines Loyola College's third annual High School Hockey Coaches Clinic Saturday, starting at 9:30 a.m. at the Loyola Athletic Complex.

Father Bauer will open the talks at 9:30 a.m. and will discuss the European techniques of hockey and the future of Canada's National team.

Although the clinic is termed a high school coaches clinic Loyola varsity hockey coach Dave Draper sends out a general invitation to all area coaches.

Bryan O'Neil, the NHL's director of business administration, is also a featured speaker on the program. O'Neil will follow Father Bauer, at approximately 10 a.m., with his topic: "Expansion - Where is the NHL heading?"

Other speakers on the program include Draper, Pete McManaman, Loyola junior varsity coach; Ed Meagher, Loyola High hockey coach; Ed Nowalkoski, Loyola College trainer; Connie Broden, member of Loyola's Sports Hall of Fame and ex-Montreal Canadiens star.

Loyola officials are also making an effort to arrange to have a member of the touring Soviet Union hockey team speak at the clinic.

The clinic will terminate with the premiere English showing of films made with the National Team illustrating the fundamentals of the game, such as skating, checking, goaltending, passing and shooting. These films will be made available on loan to any interested coaches after the clinic.
